Teachers Turn To Publishing; Print New Text

"Singing Sounds," second volume in a planned series of new phonics-singing textbooks and phonograph records co-authored by two Torrance teachers, has been released by the Bowman Educational Record Company of Los Angeles.

The books introduced the phonetic sounds of the English language through singing and listening to records, which are provided as a part of the publication.

The idea for "Singing Sounds," originated with Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Foster, former Torrance teachers, and Mrs. Marilyn Hickson and Mrs. Dorothea Hodgkinson, teachers at Walteria Elementary School.

Foster, who wrote the catchy melodies for the books, served eight years with the California schools as music coordinator, principal, and classroom teacher.

His wife, Pauline, having taught remedial reading and phonics in the public schools of Michigan and California, wrote and published three books for young readers.

Mrs. Hickson, a graduate of UCLA has taught in California for 14 years in both secondary and elementary schools.

Miss Hodgkinson is a graduate of the University of California at Berkeley and has taught for a number of years in California schools.

Early reports from the publishers indicate that numerous orders for the textbooks and the accompanying records are being received from almost every state. A recent order from a school district in Georgia indicated that they wish to use the materials to aid in the program for children with speech difficulties.

The Torrance Board of Education has approved the use of the materials in the Torrance Unified School District.

SINGING their reading lesson are students of Mrs. Marilyn Hickson and Mrs. Dorothea Hodgkinson, teachers at Walteria School who recently wrote a musical reading text. Their original approach to phonics appears in "Singing Sounds," recently-published textbook which is being used in schools in Torrance and throughout the nation.
